About Jacob:

In my mind there's a boy who exists in chains,
Inside a cold dark room of painful solitude is where he will remain,
Behind these walls the sorrow is inevitable as relentless as the passage of time,
Mentalities corrupt and dark, Brainwashed and hopelessly blind,
Prisons are packed with crowded spaces, Lifers and Guards with Hollow faces,
Shackled hearts afraid of changes and weakened wills become complacent,
Yet I maintained with patience,
Time can limit but not shatter my will,
Strength blazed across my chest as solid as penitentiary steel,
But the silence speaks it and tells me all I need to hear,
It confirms my beliefs and its promises I have to fear,
It reminds me that without freedom I'm alone,
And these white washed walls don't make up for blackened souls,
I've given 95% of my boys a handshake and a pound before they were either locked down or buried off in cemetery grounds,
What I've done is who I am,
But who I am is what I do now,
I won't let up or cease to fight,
Just this time I plan on doing it right,
And what's right lies within me,
I am learning to appreciate my struggle for it would be hard to find the joy of accomplishment without it,
We live and we learn,
We rise and we fall, like the heartbeat of a sleeping giant with bitter sweet dreams,
Stay up never down.
